WELLS-METZ THEATRE
IU Theatre & Dance wishes to acknowledge and honor the Miami, Delaware, Potawatomi, and Shawnee people, on whose ancestral homelands and resources Indiana University was built.

LIVE PERFORMANCE

The mission of the Department of Theatre, Drama, and Contemporary Dance is to advance the art, scholarship, and appreciation of theatre and dance and its place in society. We pursue this mission collectively and as individuals through theatrical productions, scholarship and publication, presentation of our work in national and international venues, formal instruction, and individual mentoring.

The Department of Theatre, Drama, and Contemporary Dance is accredited by the National Association of Schools of Theatre and is a member of the University/Resident Theatre Association and United States Institute for Theatre Technology.

LIVING IMPACT

The Servant of Two Masters (Dent, trans.) is presented by special arrangement with SAMUEL FRENCH, INC.

The video and/or audio recording of this production is strictly prohibited. Do not use cell phones, pagers, or other devices that may emit sound or light.

Message from the chair

Greetings!

Welcome to the 2019–2020 season of the Department of Theatre, Drama, and Contemporary Dance here in the beautiful Lee Norvelle Theatre and Drama Center at Indiana University!

Theatre and dance are a vital part of human expression and convey the values, hopes, fears and dreams of our world through the stories of individuals, families, and communities—however we choose to define them.

I find such joy in being part of a community of scholars, artists, and makers, here in our department and in the larger university and Bloomington communities. This season of theatre, dance, and musicals engages important ideas and addresses issues of love, hope, memory, loss, addiction, and revenge. Even classic plays such as Hamlet and The Servant of Two Masters will compel us to consider universal themes and view our world through a contemporary lens.

Our department productions are a direct application of the research, craft, art, and techniques studied and explored in our theatre and dance classrooms here on the IUB campus. Everything you will experience at this performance—from the front of house, performers, choreography, and playwriting to the design, construction, backstage crews, dramaturgy, and management—are produced by and with our students. The number of students, faculty, and staff required to mount just one production is tremendous, and after seventeen years on our IU faculty I continue to be awestruck and proud of our work. We come together as a professional model of collaboration and artistic vision to achieve the high production value you will experience at each performance.

You as an audience member have a direct impact on the study of performance and the training experience of our students. We hope that you enjoy your time with us, and we invite you to read our department mission statement included in this program. If you would like to learn more about our department, please visit us at theatre.indiana.edu.

We are grateful for the generous support of our many donors and Associate Producers whose gifts have made possible unique production opportunities and student scholarships. To support our department and our students with a financial gift, or if you are considering joining the unwavering champions in our Theatre Circle, look for the Alumni & Giving tab on our website, theatre.indiana.edu.

Many thanks for joining us!

Director's notes

There is morbid irony in the fact that Goldoni’s play contains several references to “the plague,” often because one person willfully wishes it upon another. We can take some comfort in this as a prophecy that certain jokes do become funny again with time. Less funny, but equally prophetic until then, is the fact that our Italian brothers and sisters—to whom we owe this comedic heritage—have been devastated by this biological disaster. Bergamo, the homeland of our title character, is among the hardest hit places on the planet.

I recently told someone that living through a pandemic feels like a constant exercise in weighing gratitude against grievance. Those of us fortunate enough to have our good health (knock on wood) can’t help but watch with horror as this slow-rolling tragedy unfolds, enveloping one continent at a time, putting a strain on humanity and civilization itself. People die at a time, putting a strain on humanity. Whenever monumental things happen, particularly on a global scale, I confess I find it hard to muster the scale of the crisis, scared for our precious loved ones, paranoid about “catching it,” and anxious about what the future holds, growing evermore restless in isolation. Whenever monumental things like this happen, particularly on a global scale, I confess I find it hard to muster up sentimental words and profound thoughts on theatre, since doing so feels trite in proportion to the bigger problems people are confronting . . .

I often tell students that if they’re not prepared to live a life of service, they probably shouldn’t be pursuing one in art. I like to think of art as an act of service. “For us! For us!” I yell out in the rehearsal room, an attempt to remind actors that everything they do should be for the audience. And especially in a world where doctors, nurses, caregivers, civil servants, grocery clerks, and even parents are being challenged to serve in ways they never have before, how lucky are we, the comedians and tragedians of this world, that we get to serve humanity with a play? I’ve thought a lot about this in the last few weeks . . . When moments of consequence happen, it is critically important that we practice humility, and learn to cherish our own contributions, while also standing in the shadow of heroes. After all, it is the people fighting this virus, saving lives, and keeping us fed whose stories we will want to make memorable performances in the truest tradition of the commedia dell’arte, and that our Harlequinade forbears would have been proud. The ensemble handled those two shows like a baptism by fire, with folly and abandon. It was quite simply one of the most remarkable and impressive feats of acting I have ever had the privilege of witnessing, let alone having a stake in. Part of what we love most about theatre is its ephemerality: you were either in the room where it happened when it happened, or you weren’t. And those that were there will go on to tell the tale—that I believe.

No one who worked on The Servant of Two Masters is a victim. Of course we are disappointed that the remaining IU Theatre & Dance season was suspended, but we also should be grateful for the incredible collaborative and creative process afforded to us in the making of it. I know I am. Many of us will grieve the abrupt and anticlimactic end to this academic year, but I also trust that most are grateful to the university for putting the health and safety of its students before all else. No doubt we mourn the public performances of our delightfully weird, hysterical show that will never happen, but as I said shortly before we adjourned, I doubt that any performance—even with all the trappings—would ever achieve the pure magic of those two open rehearsals on Thursday, March 12th and Friday, March 13th of 2020. Many guests from those two nights have gone out of their way to share with me how special they felt those two performances were and how fortunate they consider themselves to have seen it. I am confident we gave two memorable performances in the truest tradition of the commedia dell’arte, and that our Harlequinade forbears would have been proud. The ensemble handled those two shows like a baptism by fire, with folly and abandon. It was quite simply one of the most remarkable and impressive feats of acting I have ever had the privilege of witnessing, let alone having a stake in. Part of what we love most about theatre is its ephemerality: you were either in the room where it happened when it happened, or you weren’t. And those that were there will go on to tell the tale—that I believe.

I want to take this opportunity to acknowledge our Chair, Linda Pisano, and both Trish Hausman and Laura Judson for their mighty efforts in helping making those two open rehearsals a possibility in a very compressed period of time, and for helping to execute many of the practicalities. I want to thank the faculty and all our colleagues in the department for their incredible support, but especially those who helped finish the set and props, prepare the house for an audience, or hang and focus lights. I’ve never been so proud to call myself a Hoosier as I was in that week. Altogether, we marshalled our talents, put those characters on stage, and made people laugh at a time when they needed it most. And because of that experience, and each of you, I leave this project behind without any regrets.

To my creative team and cast more specifically, I thank you all for collaborating so generously and trusting my direction, for being patient with my swings from over-confidence to utter uncertainty, and for generally making my experience on Servant so rewarding and fun. The work was worth every minute, and at least we got that. So put it on your résumé, without conditions or qualifications, and wear it with pride!

It was funny and it was weird. It looked beautiful and I couldn’t be prouder. A triumph! Bravo! I send you all my heartfelt affection and best wishes for health and prosperity.

Your servant,
RJ

Special thanks to our season associate producers

The contributions of associate producers directly fund an IU Theatre production of the donor’s choice. As an associate producer, you will help directly support the cost of a production’s costume, scenic, lighting, sound, and projection design. Your name will be featured in our programs and all curtain speeches. You will also enjoy benefits as year-round members of Theatre Circle, an organization founded to promote and encourage the study and practice of theatre arts in the Department of Theatre, Drama, and Contemporary Dance and an awareness of theatre throughout the community.

For more information, please pick up a Theatre Circle brochure in the lobby or contact Laura Judson at ljjudson@iu.edu or by phone at 812-855-7699; or visit the Department of Theatre, Drama, and Contemporary Dance website at theatre.indiana.edu and select the Theatre Circle link.

Theatre Circle

Theatre Circle was founded in 1978 to encourage the study and practice of theatre arts at IU and to promote an awareness of IU Theatre throughout the community. Theatre Circle members enjoy a variety of benefits, including: acknowledgment in all IU Theatre programs; special event invitations; theatre-related travel opportunities; reserved seating at numerous performances and events; and much more.
